

Notifications — set preferences, watch one fire, silence a noisy kind

WHAT IT IS

Every workflow transition and every AI signal can emit a notification. Users pick their channel per kind — in-app, email, or off — and the daily digest rolls up everything low-priority so people aren't drowned. In this chapter we open Elena's notification preferences, silence a kind she doesn't want, fire a workflow transition that would have hit her, and confirm it did NOT reach her while OTHER kinds still did.

THE CLICKS

01 Show the bell

WHERE Top-right of any page → notification bell icon.

DO Click. Show the list of recent notifications.

SEE Rows: title, source (which workflow / which AI signal), timestamp, read pill.

SAY “Every workflow transition we’ve done in this demo added a row here. Same source of truth.”

02 Open preferences

WHERE User menu (bottom-left avatar) → Notification preferences. (Or Sidebar → Settings → Notifications tab.)

DO Show the per-kind matrix.

SEE Rows per notification kind (Milestone due, Panel decision, Funding change, Application received, etc.), columns for in-app / email / off.

SAY “Users choose their own channel per kind. Directors get everything by email; supervisors keep it in-app.”

03 Silence a kind

WHERE Find "Funding integrity reconciliation" row.

DO Set all three columns to "off". Save.

SEE Preference row shows "silenced". A confirmation toast.

SAY “I’ve told the system I don’t care about reconciliation dings. That preference sticks.”

04 Fire something that would have hit that kind

WHERE Sidebar → Funding integrity → find an amber row → click Resolve.

DO Confirm.

SEE Reconciliation resolved. Back on the bell → no new "reconciliation" row for me. But if another notification fired at the same time (e.g. a task completion) — it did show up.

SAY “Silenced kinds don’t reach me. Other kinds still do. The preference is fine-grained, not all-or-nothing.”

THE LINE

“The system tells the right person, on the right channel, at the right cadence — and only what they asked for.”